Dear Parish Family,

This week I have been listening to a 'huge' debate raging in Brisbane: should pineapple be on pizza? It seems to have become quite the controversy. An Italian chef recently lost an unfair dismissal case after losing his job when he refused to place pineapple on pizzas. He argued that doing so was an insult to his culture and culinary heritage. It is an interesting debate from a few perspectives: cultural, economic, traditional, adaptive, and even what we might call inculturation. At the heart of it all is the question of how an established culture welcomes new influences and makes space for them, while still preserving a sense of identity and belonging.

These are not always easy conversations to have, but they are important ones. In Australia, for better or worse, pineapple has long been a staple ingredient on the Hawaiian pizza and is commonly found on many pizza menus. From a traditional Italian perspective, there is little about that which would be considered authentic. A few years ago, while I was visiting Brindisi in southern Italy and waiting for a ferry to Greece, I met a young Italian man whose uncle owned a pizza shop. Hearing my Australian accent, his uncle proudly explained that he had sent his nephew to Sydney for six months to learn how to make "Australian style" pizza. Their hope was to meet the unusual requests of the many Australian tourists who visited their town. In that instance, good economic management simply said, "Put pineapple on it!"

Holding on to what is good, while letting go of what has become burdensome or no longer life-giving, is often key to the way cultures merge, adapt and develop. It is also one of the hardest things to do. We naturally cling to what we know, what makes us comfortable, and what gives us a sense of security. Language plays a significant role in that process. Moving to a new country is incredibly difficult, and I take my hat off to all of you who have made the courageous decision to leave the land of your birth and make Australia your home. I spent nearly twelve months in Japan and gained some appreciation of those challenges.

Through language we learn culture, tradition, and place. Language not only helps us communicate; it helps us belong. It can also be one of the greatest barriers to feeling at home. Yet it is through language that we adapt, grow, build relationships, and find our place in a community. I hope that your faith has helped sustain you through the difficult moments and given you strength when life has been challenging. I see the fruits of cultural exchange and adaptation all the time. I have long been a fan of Simbang Gabi, a tradition with Spanish roots that flourished in the Philippines and has since spread throughout the world.

Each year I see it continue to grow as local communities adapt it to their circumstances while remaining faithful to its spirit. It is a treasured tradition, not only for Filipinos and for other communities founded from the Spanish, but for many others who have come to appreciate its beauty and richness. Traditionally, Simbang Gabi is celebrated before dawn and known as the "Rooster's Mass," reflecting the early hour at which people gathered. Today, however, practical realities mean that many communities celebrate these Masses in the evening. As I often joke, it has become less the "Rooster's Mass" and more the "Rooster Going To Bed Mass!" Yet that adaptation has allowed the tradition to remain alive and accessible for contemporary families.

This year, Simbang Gabi will begin on 15 December and continue until 23 December. Everyone is warmly invited to attend, regardless of culture, background, or tradition. It is a wonderful opportunity to experience the richness of another culture's faith expression and to celebrate the diversity that strengthens our parish community.

God bless,
Greg, Parish Priest

We acknowledge the Awabakal and Worimi peoples - the traditional custodians of these lands.

For the proper use of wealth

Let us pray for the proper use of wealth, that not succumbing to the temptation of selfishness, it may always be put at the service the common good and solidarity of those who have less.
